Alberta Oils the Wheels For Fast Emigration

Starting to a new life across the globe can often be a lengthy, protracted process but thanks to the discovery of vast oil sands reserves in Alberta province in Canada, UK citizens are now working in vibrant cities such as Calgary in less than four months.

Calgary has experienced a prolonged period of sustained economic growth which many Brits are now also enjoying. According to the North West's leading emigration experts, Four Corners Emigration who have been helping people migrate to Canada for the past ten years, Calgary currently offers fantastic opportunities to a wide range of skilled and semi-skilled workers and their families.

Skills in demand include bricklayers, carpenters, plumbers, gas fitters, burglar alarm installers, glaziers, sheet metal workers, vehicle mechanics, panel beaters, vehicle paint sprayers and floor layers. Canadian trucking companies are also looking to recruit British truck drivers particularly for 'long haul' routes and there are even multiple vacancies for window and door factory assembly workers.

Those workers who do not have qualifications other than UK secondary school but have many years of trade expertise to offer are invariably not eligible to emigrate. However, the job offer completely reverses that situation making them a very attractive proposition to Canadian employers.

David Roberts, Client Services Manager, Four Corners Emigration explains:

"Calgary is a real boom town. Employment opportunities are abundant and employers will hold a job vacancy for you whilst you undertake the four month process to get a work permit. If you are starting the process now, it isn't unrealistic to imagine yourself in Calgary for Christmas."

Four Corners provides access to many employment vacancies and can handle the whole process of applying for a work permit that will allow relocation to start the job in just four months followed by the process to apply for permanent residency.
