

PRESS RELEASE

Bad Weather Leads To Floods Of Enquiries

Continuing poor weather, high level terror alerts and a new Prime Minister are all factors contributing to an unseasonably high number of Britons making their first move towards working abroad, reports the North's leading emigration specialists, Four Corners Emigration Ltd.

During the summer months, the company which is based in South Manchester, usually expects a reduction in the level of enquiries before a busy period from September onwards but this year the opposite is occurring. In fact, the number of telephone enquiries and people completing their online 'eligibility' test has risen continuously throughout the year with substantial increases during the past month.

David Roberts, Client Services Manager at Four Corners Emigration explains:

"The lure of warmer weather has always been a key reason for Britons wanting to emigrate, second only to the promise of a better quality of life. A sustained period of disappointing weather such as we have been experiencing, especially in the North, has taken its toll on the British resilience."

Four Corners Emigration, now in its tenth year of operation, is currently helping people into employment in Canada and New Zealand in less than four months. David continues:

"Many of our clients are blue collar workers, often doing outdoor jobs which are frequently disrupted by the weather. The prospect of favourable weather conditions all year round is certainly less stressful."

If you would like to find out more about emigrating to Australia, New Zealand, Canada and the USA, please contact Four Corners on 0845 8419453 or visit www.fourcorners.net.
